Why is Source Water Protection Important to You?

Conditions in surface waters reflect what is happening in the surrounding watershed, the land area that provides water to a particular stream or river. The quality of the stream and the types of organisms that live in the stream, are affected by how the surrounding land is developed, what is carried off these lands into the streams during rainstorms, how much vegetation remains along stream banks, and many other factors. The purer the source waters, the higher the quality of water you will receive at the tap.

Every business and residence has a stake in the success of these plans. Our water quality depends upon all of us working cooperatively to maintain and improve our source water conditions.

Please consider a small donation to help ensure the success of this outing, and the health of our watershed.
